Announcement Regarding WellSpring Center for Hope

Chicago, IL, March 13, 2015 — With great sadness and regret, we announce that WellSpring Center for Hope is suspending services effective Friday, March 13, 2015. WellSpring has provided domestic violence counseling for women and families on Chicago's south and southwest side for 27 years.

The decision was influenced in part by the current economic realities regarding federal, state and local funding for social service programs. With ever-decreasing funding and the limited reimbursements available, WellSpring was unable to remain financially viable.

WellSpring provided direct services to more than 300 families every year. Before the closing, the agency's staff members worked to transition clients to other area providers.

If you have any questions or are in need of information regarding domestic violence services, please refer to the list of resources on the home page of the WellSpring website.

Thank you.
